Crime from U.S. military down in Okinawa, say police officials

Pacific Stars and Stripes

CAMP FOSTER, Okinawa - The number of crimes committed by American servicemembers on Okinawa in the past year has gone down dramatically, Okinawa police say.

In a report released by Okinawa police recently, the number of criminal offenses committed of U.S. military personnel and Status of Forces Agreement civilians is down since U.S. military officials took steps to control off-duty activities of servicemembers.

In the wake of the abduction and rape of a 12-year old Okinawa girl by three servicemen last September, military officials on Okinawa improved their briefings of incoming military personnel and set new restrictions on the sale of alcohol on base and liberty hours in popular bar districts off base.

Since the rape incident, in which the three men were convicted and sentenced to up to seven years in prison, Okinawa police reported a sharp decrease in crimes committed by Americans here under the Status of Forces Agreement.

Okinawa police reported 34 criminal offenses committed by SOFA-status Americans in the year since the rape incident, all minor offenses.

For the first eight months of 1996 police reported 22 incidents involving Americans, resulting in 12 arrests, none of them for major felonies. If the trend continues, arrests will be down sharply from last year, when Japanese police arrested 62 American servicemen and civilians in 70 incidents, including two felonies involving five arrests

Mokapu Elementary students give their input about the super playground

Cpl. Michael Wiener

Imaginations were running wild at Mokapu Elementary on Monday as kids brainstormed ideas for the new super playground while Barry Segal, architect for Leathers and Associates, took it all in.

"Design Day has been a part of this company for 20 years," said Segal, "It is what we are all about. We think kids are the experts of play."

Segal started early Monday going into each classroom and asking the students what they wanted on their playground.

"Not all of the ideas are workable," said Segal. "Kids start wanting carnival rides and we just can't do that. The most profound idea was a petting zoo with live alligators."

The kids were excited about designing their own playground, and they agreed that kids know how to play more than "Kids have better ideas than adults because we know what we want," said Shannon Snell, 11. "When adults think of playgrounds, they think of monkey bars."

"It will be our playground with the ideas we thought of," said Robin Gander,

Offloading tests new scanning gear

Sgt. William Poff

KAWAIHAE PIER, Hawaii - The combat and logistics buildup for Pohakuloa Training Area 1-97 is being conducted as a Maritime Prepositioning Force exercise where the Marines of Combat Service Support Group 3 offload, scan, and through-put all combat and support assets to units.

With a new type of scanner, Landing Force Support Party uses specialized software to track all vehicles and cargo until it's staged at the arrival and assembly operations element, where it can be assigned to requesting unit.

"During offload and through-put, tracking becomes accountability drill," said 1stLt. Norman L. Reitter, commanding officer, Landing Support Company. "Using scans in a 5-ton truck. automated information technology, we are able to track the cargo and equipment with 'real time' speed."

By scanning bar code labels attached to the cargo, once the vehicle comes off the Logistical Support Vessel and then at each stage of the through-put process, LSC can give unit commanders the precise location of each piece of gear, Reitter said.

"This has been an outstanding training exercise," Reitter said. "Everyone is learning about the new equipment and procedures needed to conduct an MPF offload and regeneration. A few modifications to the training were needed since we were not actually offloading an MPF ship, but a series of LSV deliveries from Oahu. This stretches the exercise's time to days longer than what an offload would normally take."

This was the first time an exercise of this size has taken place for a PTA evolution since the brigade was disbanded, according to Reitter.

"This is also the first time CSSG-3 has conducted an actual MPF exercise," said Reitter. "PTA is not just an opportunity to train the infantry. From here on out we're going to conduct this type of exercise during each deployment here.

"Next time we should have all the offload organizations communication assets in place before offloading operations begin and we'll have them in place the entire exercise," Reitter continued. "This is a logistician's dream, because of all the logistical requirements and moving parts that make up an MPF exercise."

The initial commander's guidance was for a quick, efficient through-put, assets accountability and personnel and equipment safety, according to Reitter.

In order to alleviate problems with humanitarian transfers, sign-up for the Exceptional Family Member Program will become mandatory soon, which would cut down on what officials have estimated to be nearly 1,200 humanitarian transfers since the Marine Corps' EFMP began with an All-

Marine bulletin in 1990. The Marine Corps could save a lot of money, Marines who have family members with special needs could save headache and worry by simply enrolling in the program. Designed to assist monitors in determining where they assign Marines, with respect to the needs of their families, the EFMP program is sadly underutilized, according to experts in the program, from here and Washington, D.C. "When a servicemember enrolls, not only is he or she

Infinite Moonlight '96 stars combat engineers

Sgt. Steve Ongley
13th MEU (SOC) Public Affairs

AL QATRANAH, Jordan - U.S. Marine and Jordanian army combat engineers had a blast conducting combined demolitions training here during Exercise Infinite Moonlight '96.

Marines from A Company, 1st Combat Engineer Battalion, Battalion Landing Team 1/4, 13th Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable) trekked to the demolition range each day for cross-training with their Jordanian counterparts, the combat engineers of the 10th Hashemite Brigade. The training solidified an already strong bond between the mine-finders from the two countries and allowed them to exchange techniques.

and create obstacles to hinder enemy movement on the battlefield.

The CEB Marines used the Jordanian desert to practice these skills. They set up concertina and barbed wire to stop troops and detonated shape charges and TNT to make a gaping hole in a road to stop vehicles. Once they created an obstacle, the Marines showed how they would get under, over, around or through it.

Before the exercise, the Marines prepared a variety of demonstrations for the Jordanians. The Marines found the Jordanians were familiar with American demolitions, said SSgt. Tom McCloud, platoon guide, CEB detachment.

The explosives available were limited mostly to C-4 plastic explosives, shape charges and TNT. The Marines had to piece together the explosives and available materials to create expedient charges that fit the mission. The Marines concocted a claymore anti-personnel mine using C-4 and old nails; engineer stakes stuffed with C-4 served as expedient bangalore torpedoes, used for breaching wire

"Our Marines improvised with the demo available to make the classes with Jordanians a success. They seemed impressed by our expedient charges," McCloud said.

The Marines were impressed with the camaraderie of the Jordanian engineers. The Jordanian engineers seemed to know each other's moves without even saying anything, said LCpl. Reuben Hernandez, combat engineer, 3rd squad.

But the Marines and Jordanians had to learn how to communicate with each other the first few days. The Jordanian officer and platoon sergeant spoke some English, but for most of the troops, conveying ideas was reduced to hand motions or pointing out a phrase in a book put together by the BLT, said Hernandez.

Besides the language barrier, the Marines and their hosts worked through some other differences. All military organizations are mainly concerned with mission accomplishment, McCloud said, but they have different approaches to reaching their goal. Marines eat and drink on the run, but the Jordanians take breaks right in the midst of training to eat, drink tea or pray. The Jordanians helped the Marines appreciate the Arab approach to training during one of their breaks.

"When they brought out the watermelon and tea, I think that really broke the ice," Hernandez said.

"It's been good to go out and learn about another culture, while training and hands-on experience."

Every Marine did an outstanding job, McCloud said. When one Marine was called away to support another mission, the next Marine was able to step up and continue with the training.

"This was a unique experience. Because of crosstraining with the Jordanians, we got to see how they did things and got a couple of ideas," McCloud

The training gave the Jordanians a variety of new ideas and techniques. They earned even more respect for U.S. Marines, but more so, the hosts had a blast making some new friends, said Sgt. Ahmed Onoff, platoon sergeant, 10th Hashemite Brigade.

Don't believe the hype about Hawaii public schools — get involved in education process

MCB Hawaii community member

ome advice we received prior to transferring to Hawaii as a Marine family was "Buy a Jeep, you'll need it;" "Plan to keep your dog inside to protect her from putting deadly bullfrogs in her mouth;" and "Plan to sent your children to private school because Hawaii's public schools are inadequate."

I can't say where this advice came from, it was mostly just "the word," and even though it was generally accepted, it was worth the price just to experience paradise.

Today, and 17 years later, I'm happy to say there is little truth to those words. nor was there any at that time. Having been heavily involved with the public schools here for the past 11 years, I am aware the perception and advice about Hawaii's public schools still exists among the military community.

Peters

It is important to help change that perception and show other families how to make the system work for them and their children. The benefits reaped are well worth the time and effort involved.

As a Parent-Teacher-Student Association board member for 10 years, a parent teacher for four, andwith three children at three schools, I have had many opportunities to talk with parents about every aspect of our public schools and their expectations. I offer this advice - don't listen to rumors, get the facts and get Granted, our schools are not the funding is not perfect and the funding is inadequate, but there is so much we parents can offer. In our three public schools, parents and military personnel have repainted entire buildings, provided tutors, funded science labs, started support groups, built playgrounds, organized field trips, initiated reading programs and supported existing school programs and events. By offering your time and presence, you not only show the school and its staff you care, thereby earning their trust to include you more, but you also plant the seed in your child's mind that education is utmost on your priority list.

"Getting involved" can start by simply joining the PTSA. This is the link that ties parents to what's happening at the school and offers them ways to get involved. But it takes more than just submitting the dues. Parents must take the time to read everything that comes home. Most schools send a volunteer sign-up list. Sign up for those activities and projects where you can help, even if your child asks you not to, which happens often at the 'Granted, our schools secondary level. If you're not are not perfect and receiving these forms, go to the school and ask for them, rather than do nothing. enough, but their is so There are many ways to help where you won't even be seen much we parents can by your teen.

> When you offer your help, even to do something as simple as stuff envelopes, it gets your foot in the door and gives you the opportunity to meet other parents and school staff, and gives you a chance to share your concerns and ideas, and to get the feel of the school. Attend PTSA meetings, Open House, Art and Literature nights. Read the newsletters that come home monthly - they're full of news your teen won't remember or desire to tell you. Start with the small projects that give you the confidence to gradually chair a committee or become a board member. You'll learn the process for voicing concerns or initiating action in a way that earns

If you don't have experience or a means of transportation, there are things you can do at home such as phone tree calling, or folding, stapling and labeling newsletters and flyers. These activities acquaint you with other parents and opens the network needed to be informed about your child's school.

Our schools don't need more negative publicity. There is nothing to gain by spreading rumors and passing along misinformation, or assuming the worst. If you take the time to investigate and give public schools a chance, you may be pleasantly surprised. If you have come to Hawaii with preconceived notions about Hawaii public schools, or feel you have no choice but to send your children to public school, take a positive approach and become an active partner in your child's school. My favorite quote applies here: "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem."

Swiss Scientists Discover New Energy Product

Lugano, Switzerland—After 25 years of research Lightning 828 was developed with the help of Swiss Laboratories. After extensive testing with amazing results, Lightning 828 is now available in the United States. Scientists are amazed at Lightning 828's results on improved memory, attitude and athletic performance.
In a double blind cross-over trial on university students in Italy, Lightning 828 was given twice daily for 12 weeks. The results were astonishing. Students obtained higher scores in math, logic and physical education.

This new discovery has been a windfall for working and active people that seem to run short of energy around mid-afternoon and need a little extra lift. Lightning 828 when taken in the morning gives a sustained, balanced form of energy throughout the day.

During an interview in Chicago, a beautician stated, "I used to go home exhausted after being on my feet all day. Now it's just incredible. I go home with extra energy and really enjoy my family more." Lightning 828 is a necessary boost for students, professionals and senior citizens.

Investigators valued in recent case

LCpl. Steven Williams

A Marine was sentenced to 10 years in a federal prison Sept. 10 after an investigation in May by two Naval Criminal Investigation Service agents uncovered a potential methamphetamine laboratory and explosive devises and materials.

Special agent Rodney Budd, NCIS, received information in January which tipped off possible drug related activities in the home of Cpl. Jonathan M. Christman here.

"We knew he was very interested in starting a meth lab and he had approached other individuals to go into this venture with him," said Ken L. Minnick, special agent, NCIS.

Working closely with Minnick and Patricia D. Sorenson, forensic chemist, NCIS Regional Forensics Laboratory in San Diego, Calif., the NCIS team used a number of techniques to confirm information about chemicals, materials and literature in the Marine's possession, according to Minnick.

However, in May "the case got cold and we weren't sure what we had, so we pulled the subject in and attempted to interrogate him," said Minnick. "He immediately invoked, which means he either asked for an attorney or requested to remain silent."

Immediately following Christman's automatic withdrawal' from questioning, the agents obtained more informa-

"We uncovered a number of dangerous items such as three one quarter sticks of TNT, black powder, simulated booby traps, two handguns and a sawed off .22 caliber rifle," said Mark E. Pendell, resident agent in charge, NCIS. "He had expanded to some very dangerous activity."

"He also attempted to manufacture

"There are 40 or more families within a 200-foot radius of the building," said Minnick. "He put them all in very serious danger.".

"On a still day with no wind at all, if a fire broke out there would've been an immediate explosion," said Sorenson. "Not only would the immediate area be in danger, but the entire base would have been involved because of the toxic gases given off."

"Who knows what kind of chemical cloud that could have created," Minnick added.

"He had everything you need to start a meth lab," said Minnick. "But he was stopped short before he got cranked up. Although NCIS was successful in undermining the brewing narcotics operation, Sorenson said Christman passed a deadly chore over to the offload, have made 45 convoys to to the exercise area, transporting over 295 pieces of equipment and 21 containers," Reitter said. Speed and responsibility during the exercise is a facet the Marines handled well, he added.

"Everything that happens at the port is my responsibility," said 2ndLt. Elizabeth J. Donnell, Port Operations Group officer in charge, CSSG-3. "Speed and accountability make the mission and situational demands dictate everything. Who needs what and where does it need to go? Sometimes the pier operations group and the final destination could be 300 miles apart."

Every day and every offload, the Marines make improvements and changes to become more efficient, Donnell said.

"The most interesting aspect of the exercise is everybody is training together and learning from mistakes now, not when we're called to do a real life mission," Donnell added. "Everybody's learning from this exercise and this enhances our knowledge as duty experts for loading and offloading combat and support assets.

"Enthusiasm to learn procedures and the new scanning equipment is very high," she added. Marines are anticipating being included in this year's Freedom Banner and Cobra Gold exercises."

These exercises the lessons learned from this one will make their mission run even smoother.

NCIS protects quality of life worldwide

LCpl. Steven Williams

The primary function of Naval Criminal Investigative Service isn't to hunt down bad guys and ensure they are dealt with appropriately. That's a benefit.

The organization's most important function is protecting quality of life issues and contributing to command readiness, according to Mark E. Pendell, resident agent in charge,

"NCIS serves the community by providing an investigative function to address felony situations," said Pendell.

NCIS has 950 special agents spread throughout 160 offices worldwide including aircraft carriers and other major combatants, according to Pendell. The special agents are civilian professionals serving the Navy and Marine Corps with criminal investigations, counterintelligence and naval security.

Unfortunately, some in the military community view NCIS as the enemy, according to Ken Minnick, special agent, NCIS.

"The only reason they should think we're the enemy is if they're doing bad things," said Minnick.

Although NCIS is forced to become the adversary to trouble-makers, Minnick said commands depend on them.

"Sometimes commands see us as a necessary evil," said Minnick. "Without us they would have a lot of problems. We definitely assist these units by making cases against bad eggs who have no business being Marines.

Recently, an undercover agent busted a ring of more than 30 ser-vicemembers involved in marijuana One Marine acted as the primary distributor while others were either sellers or habitual users. "All of them were punished, ranging from non-judicial punishment to five years in prison," said Minnick.

"We know drugs will be a problem and will require a great deal of vigilance by all involved to stop it," said Pendell. "Drugs are available in Hawaii. People who are looking for trouble will find it."

Many cases NCIS handles are successfully investigated with information from anonymous witnesses or undercover operations, according to Minnick.

"We need the cooperation of citizens, Marines and commands to work our cases effectively," said Minnick. "We can't work without cooperation from the commanding officers on down."

Minnick said NCIS's mission is merely taking out the garbage so innocent people in the military community don't have to worry.

Helicopter maintenance at sea remains a priority with HMH-463

LCpl. Steven Williams

U.S.S. BOXER - During flight operations from naval vessels, pilots are normally in the spotlight as they demonstrate how to negotiate wind and a ship's rocking flight deck. Although the pilots are important as front men in operations, it's the Marines behind the curtains who run the show.

"The greatest thing we have working for us is the guys behind the scenes keeping the aircraft up and running," said 1stLt. Pete McConnell, co-pilot, Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 463, here. "There is a high demand on our maintenance effort and they work a lot of overtime. We wouldn't be flying without them."

HMH-463 boarded the U.S.S. Boxer (LHD-4) Sept. 3-10 for some rare shipboard experience with their Navy counterparts, said McConnell. Keeping up with maintenance on 30-year-old CH-53D Sea Stallions is quite a chore for Marines in any area. Shrinking into the tight confines aboard ship and adding the effects of water doesn't help.

"You have to watch the helicopters carefully because of the salt water spray," said Cpl. Allan M. Ziepke, aircraft mechanic. "It's a lot easier for corrosion to start and it will destroy the parts fast."

With the danger of salt water more eminent at sea than here, the Marines put in overtime during both maintenance and inspections.

"We do seven-day inspections, which take an average of one hour," said Cpl. Dillon C. Stone, collateral duty inspector. "During an inspection, we do things like fold the tail, inspect disconnect couplings for excessive wear, corrosion or cracked teeth. We inspect hinge bushings and hinge pins and we make sure bolts have the correct torque." The Marines spent around 10 hours a day ensuring the aircraft were up to par, according to Stone.

"If anything on the aircraft goes bad, we have to replace it," said Ziepke. "We have to guard all the major components and make sure they don't go bad. For example, we have a lot of problems with drive shafts. They take anywhere from an hour to two hours to replace."

And on a ship, getting to those hard-to-reach places gets even harder. "We focus a lot more on safety with the stands and working on top of the aircraft because if the ship turns or hits a wave, we can be thrown off," said Ziepke. "It keeps us more aware of what we're doing. Being careful makes us more proficient." "This training will make us more ship safety oriented for when we go on a ship again," said Stone. "I won't be lost like I was this time."

Besides expanding on the motto "safety is paramount," Ziepke said the Marines also got better with the speed of their service.

"We constantly had to have the aircraft folded on ship for space reasons," said Ziepke. "On land, we can keep them spread most of the time. This training made us better at folding them quickly."

Training wasn't the only advantage to packing the squadron onto a ship for a week, Ziepke added.

"When we do something like this, we seem to get a lot closer and we work better together, said Ziepke. "On base, we're always thinking about what we're going to do when we go home and we concentrate more on after-work activities.

Although the Marines worked a lot of overtime, fought sea sickness from the constant swaying and were confined to small quarters, some said they are anxious to do it again.

"We need to do this training more often," said Cpl. Douglas M. Mania, crew chief. "You don't get proficient at something without doing it often. Doing this training more often would make us more comfortable with deployments."

Squadrons here are discussing unit deployment programs aboard ships, according to McConnell. If squadron UDPs are approved, HMH-463 is already one step closer to preparation.

'Dads Only' Class prepares new fathers for parenting

Cpl. Michael Wiener

Scenes like this, played with dolls as the babies and peanut butter as the boo-boo are part and parcel of the Dads Only Class, part of an eight-week parenting course by the New Parent Support Program.

The class is part of an eightweek parenting course set up by the New Parent Support Program. It is an open discussion on several topics, all of which involve fatherhood.

"The Dads Only Class helps dads or dads-to-be understand what their role is," said Nancy Tahara, New Parent Support Program. "It also gives them a chance to express their concerns and ask other fathers for advice. Hearing stories and getting advice from other fathers who are the same age and in the same profession is more credible than hearing it from me," said Tahara.

"I can learn a lot from the experiences of other fathers," said Sgt. David Adams. "It also teaches first-time dads what to expect and gives them a chance to ask questions."

Many times during a pregnancy, a father-to-be will feel left out or, as though he is not important.

"I like this class because it made me feel more important," said Sgt. Anthony Staley. "I was getting jealous of my wife because it seemed she was getting all of the attention."

The class also involved some practical application," said enting education.'

"Talking to other dads gave me a better understanding of what I have to expect, and I learned a lot about what women have to go through," said Staley. "Being a mother is a tough job."

But it wasn't all serious discussion. At the end of the class, the dads compete in the Dirty Diaper Rodeo, a race to correctly change a "dirty" diaper on a

The Dads Only Class is just one part of the "Expectant Parent Class," and it is recommended that couples start with the first course, "The Last Nine Yards." Free childcare is provided as long as the child has an up-to-date shot record.

"I recommend any parents or parents-to-be take this course," said Tahara. "It is ongoing par-

The Special Purpose Integrated Remote Intelligence Terminal is a new intelligence communications satellite recently acquired by 1st Radio Battalion.

Trojan Spirit II gives Marines a new ear

Cpl. Michael Wiener

First Radio Battalion recently benefited from the addition of the latest in communication's technology.

Although Marine Expeditionary Force received an earlier version of the new Spirit system, 1st Radio has gone one better, procurring the updated version. The system can pass intelligence information anywhere in the Marine Corps much quicker than old communication systems.

Special "The Purpose Integrated Remote Intelligence Terminal is a robust communications system to help support operations," said Capt. Soren Ashmall, commanding officer, C "It will facilitate the flow of communication equipment and tows the antenna. The second Humvee carries spare parts and maintenance gear, but can be utilized as the main communication center. A four-man team runs the $1.5 million system, and it can be augmented by one general maintenance technician, Ashmall said.

Two Trojan Spirit II communication systems were assigned to the battalion. One of the systems will be designated for III Marine Expeditionary Force, and the other will be for the commander of Marine Forces Pacific.

"The addition of Trojan Spirit II gives the MEF commander a new weapon in his arsenal if called upon for a mission," said to a place where they can't take care of their family member."

"When a Marine who hasn't enrolled is sent to a base where his or her family member's needs can't be met, it creates a ripple effect throughout the Marine's entire job field, especially when that person has to be reassigned to somewhere else," said Belinda A. Sims, EFMP manager, Family Service Center Program, Headquarters Marine Corps. "When one Marine gets reassigned, it affects other Marines whose orders and assignments have to be changed to accommodate the other Marine."

The Corps spent $1.65 million from January to August this year returning 55 Marines from overseas assignments, primarily Okinawa, because they were not enrolled in EFMP and had to be elsewhere to meet a family member's special needs, according to Sims.

"It's about $30,000 each to reassign a servicemember," said Sims. "It will run to about $3.3 million for the year." Once the commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. Charles C. Krulak, heard this news, he wasn't happy, Sims said.

"He had a fit," she said. "He realized the only reason we're spending this kind of money is because these Marines either were not on the program, so their monitors didn't know not to send them, or because they weren't screened properly before they left."

"According to Marine Corps Order P175.4 from October 1992, sponsors must enroll their family members in the program," Sims said. Those who don't will face some form of punishment, as Sims said a proposal is going through the HQMC chain which would allow administrative action against sponsors who don't enroll their exceptional family member.

"We're also looking at a recommendation to hold the sending command responsible for personnel who have to come back due to a streening deficiency," said Sims.

However, there's a simpler solution, Sims said; all Marines with special needs family members should sign up, even in boot camp and Officers' Candidate School.

The Family Service Center would like to get Marines to enroll as soon as they become Marines, whether it's boot camp or OCS, which would boost the number of enrollees by five to 10 percent, according to Sims. Astumbling block to enrollment has always been the perception enrolling in the EFMP would hurt careers, she added.

"Enrollment has picked up," Sims said. "The word is getting out, but we're finding that we have to get over the perception this will hurt a Marine's career."

In fact, Marines continue to serve just as any other Marine would. Even if a family member is enrolled in EFMP, the Marine can still be deployed.

"In the event a life and death situation comes up," said Sims, "we can take a look at deployment status, but nine times out of 10, if the Marine is in a unit that deploys, he's deploying too."

Even for single Marine parents, the consideration in EFMP is for the family member.

"Sponsors with a family member enrolled in EFMP need to have a family care plan," explained Sims. "Single Marine parents especially need to have a person who will be take care of the family member if the sponsor has to leave."

Once enrolled, sponsor duty station choices fall under one of four categories: Category I means the sponsor can be assigned anywhere; Category II pinpoints an overseas or continental U.S. assignment; Category III means no overseas assignments (however, the Marine can still do one year unaccompanied tour) and Category IV pinpoints assignment near a major Department of Defense medical facility, such as Tripler Army Medical Center here or Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland.

"Category IV may also be assigned to a major city, where the sponsor would be covered by CHAMPUS," said Sims.

Family members in the program are grouped in four categories as well. The categories don't necessarily correspond to each other, as in the servicemember's category I being the family member's category I.

Category I includes speech therapy and mild asthma. Category II is for those requiring physical therapy, moderate asthma and special educational needs; category III is for mental health, insulin dependent diabetics, HIV-positive and major depression. Category IV is reserved for those suffering from heart conditions, cancer, and AIDS.

Sims made it clear categories for family members are not for active duty Marines. EFMP is only for family members enrolled in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System, she said.

Military sponsors aren't left in the lurch, however. Heather M. Hebdon, an Army spouse, developed Specialized Training of Military Parents, which encompasses issues of special education, rights, wills and guardianships, effective communication and resources and records.

"We find that a good percentage of military families don't have or have access to their child's education record, which makes assimila-

Monday night, Segal talked to the community and gave them background on what his company was about. After a slide show of other super playgrounds, Segal presented a schematic drawing of the base's own playground. He stressed community involvement was the key to building

"For 20 years, we have been building playgrounds just using the community," said Segal. "You don't have to be a skilled craftsman to help, there is a job for everyone."

Even the students will take time out of their school day and help on the site. During a question and answer period, parents and kids asked Segal anything they had on their mind. Safety was a key

"It's a great idea to have the kids give their ideas," said Sandy Tisdale, military spouse, "and he was able to use the ideas and keep the playground safe at the same time."

Refreshments were served and volunteer sign-up sheets were handed out at the completion of the meeting, and Segal again stressed community involvement.

"The playground is not just a playground, it is more than that," said Segal. "It really builds a community and those that don't get involved will miss out o something wonderful."

The playground is slated to begin construction Dec. 2 and will be completed on Dec. 6.

tion at a new base or community difficult," said Hebdon.

STOMP was established in 1985 and currently serves 22,000 families in all four services.

"Parents are more aware of what they need to do these days," Hebdon said, 'but there's still a need for more of them to be informed.

"I did a study in 1986 looking at military families versus civilian families and how they integrated within their communities," Hebdon added. "Less than half the military families knew their rights about the educational system for children with disabilities. On average, it took 18 months for a military family to get hooked into the community support system, versus six months for civilians."

With the aid of programs like STOMP, Hebdon said assimilation time has come down to between six and eight months.

Hebdon's research includes personal experience.

"We were enrolled in the (Army version of the) program," she said. "Tve seen it from a number of different perspectives - as advocate and as a parent. This program is something that is drastically needed, because it keeps the family together, saves the government money and ensures the family member will get whatever service he or she

This statue of King Kamehameha is just one of the many things to see on the island tour.

Guide brings island excursion to life

Cpl. Michael Wiener

sland newcomers can get a taste of Oahu through a tour set up by the Family Service Center here. The tour bus leaves base in the morning, and after a trip around the island, arrives back on base in the afternoon.

Liebert O'Sullivan has been the tour guide on these tours for four years. Born on Molokai'i and raised on Oahu, the 66-year-old is very educated on Hawaii and its history.

"Tve always tried to learn everything I could about the islands," said O'Sullivan. "If someone asked me a question about something and I didn't know, I wouldn't be doing my job very well."

Throughout the tour, O'Sullivan not only points out the places of interest, but gives the history behind it as well. For instance, at the first stop, the Pali Lookout, O'Sullivan explained how King Kamehameha and his army pushed their enemies over the cliff in conquest of the island.

"I decided I wanted to be a guide after I went on a tour five years ago and the guide knew nothing at all about the history and and culture of Hawaii," said O'Sullivan.

Because he has lived on the island for so long and had learned so much about it, O'Sullivan knows the more trivial facts as well.

"A lot of people wonder ask me why Tripler is painted pink. In 1948, the Damen family donated the land to the military for a hospital," explained O'Sullivan. "The only stipulation was that the hospital had to be painted pink, and if it was ever a different color, the land would be returned."

"He's a great guide," said Lt. Kirk Marsten, island newcomer. "He is very interesting and I think he hit all the highlights of the island."

The tour included Honolulu, Waikiki and Diamondhead. Then after a stop at Hickam Headquarters and lunch at Burger King, O'Sullivan and his "disciples" headed for the Dole Plantation and the North Shore. After meandering their way down the windward side of Oahu, the tour arrived home with the new-arrivals having gained a new-found knowledge of the island.

"I thought it was a good tour," said Deborah Holley, military spouse. "I saw many things I probably never would have seen and learned a lot of information about this place."

The monthly tour is free, and snacks and sodas are also provided at no charge. Sign-up is handled by FSC, 257-1931 building 216, and with only 44 seats, reservations should be made early, O'Sullivan said.

Cpi. Michael Wiener Liebert O'Sullivan points out places interest at the Pali lookout.

Ravings of a Mad Man tephen Gude

First year impressions

ve been here a little more than a year now, and I am happy to report I haven't been thrown in jail - yet, as my captain keeps reminding me.

My initial impressions of Hawaii, and particularly Oahu, since I haven't been to any of the other islands, haven't changed from when I was here in 1990 for RIMPAC-90.

Scenic Beauty

There's no way you can miss the gorgeous scenery. I'm a big fan of mountains and greenery, and here, the Koolau range is particularly compelling. The first time I drove along the windward side of the Likelike Highway, I almost ran off the road, because I couldn't stop staring at the mountains.

It's even more imposing when you're standing outside looking at it. I see just how insignificant I really am, next to these sentinels. From my desk in my office, I can look out of the window and see the gap in the mountains where Japanese planes flew to attack Pearl Harbor after they attacked here. I'm a big fan of history, too, and seeing spots like that always makes my mind wander. I wonder what the pilots were thinking as they flew their planes through the gap, and what the people who saw the attack were thinking. Reminds me of Okinawa

To more modern thoughts, Oahu has struck me as a place much like Okinawa, especially walking through Waikiki. It's not just that many of the tourists are Japanese, but the weather's a lot like Okinawa, and there are lots of signs in Japanese, too. The countryside reminds me of Okinawa, too, as do the prices at stores. The people

The people here are friendly but let me qualify that statement. People from the mainland who have transplanted themselves here seem to feel anyone who doesn't know as much about Hawaii as they do is an ignorant cur. People who were born here but whose parents are from other countries call themselves Hawaiian, but really, can they? Are they Hawaiian as in "native, with deep family roots" or as in "I was born here, so I am Hawaiian," although besides knowing a few phrases, they speak not one iota of the Hawaiian language.

Would someone pound me on the head with a koa wood club if I express the feeling that the word "aloha" wasn't used by native Hawaiians as a catch-all phrase, such as "Thank You," "Hello," "Good bye," and "he hit a home run?" Maybe I'm wrong, but it just doesn't seem that way. Perhaps it's a sort of Americanization of a place that shouldn't be Americanized.

The animals What are those disgusting creatures that crawl out of the grass every time I wash my car or mow the lawn? They look like roaches but they're not as quick, and they don't hesitate to crawl on people. At least the egrets eat them. I enjoy watching it happen nature in full effect. If I had a video camera, I'd film some scenes

I've also found out I'm not the only husband here who has to kill geckos because the wife is scared of them. Other Marines here have told me the same thing, despite the local saying that geckos bring good luck. Ladies, for the good fortune of us all, show a little aloha spirit and let the geckos

Men's varsity basketball team looks to new season, more fan support

Sgt. Michael Terrell

he Hawaii Marines varsity basketball team is made up of top-level players who compete against other military service teams and college teams here. With several players returning from last year's team, head coach Michael Terrell can afford to let players have an influence on what happens on the court.

"If a player has an idea or complaint, they can go to one of the captains and then come to me or my staff," said Terrell. "If it's a good idea, we'll use it."

This style marks a change for Terrell, who was a player on last year's squad until a knee injury sidelined him. He was asked to fill in the head coach's role when the former coach was sent on temporary duty.

I volunteered to coach fifth graders while I was in college," he said. "I was even a player/coach on a few intramural teams, but I never coached on this level.

"It was a challenge," Terrell continued. "I had to prove to myself as well as the team I could handle the job. It's like when you get promoted, your peers become your subordinates, and you have to 'show and prove.' I don't have to do that this year."

Especially not with players like Walter Moore and Kevin Spivey. Moore is a former All-Marine who plays point and shooting guard.

"I feel comfortable when Moore has the ball in his hands at the point," Terrell said. "But I've got other guys who can run the point,

SSgt. Stephen Gude

With forwards like Curtis Brooks (dunking) ready to slam and jam inside the paint, the Hawaii Marine varsity basketball team is poised for a successful season.

too, which will allow me to use Moore primarily as a scoring threat this year. He's one of the best shooters on the team."

The 6'-6" Spivey, who played Division I college ball at Oregon State, is the most versatile player Terrell has.

"He can do it all," said Terrell." "Inside, outside, facing the basket, back to the basket, he can put the ball on the floor and hit the jump shot." Spivey can play all positions, but will be used primarily at forward and center.

Last year's leading scorer, forward Wayne Bryant, returns.

"Doc was injured at the beginning of the season last year," Terrell explained, but he finished strong and was selected to the all-tournament team. Last year, Bryant split his time between center and forward, but with a new crop of big men, like 6'-6" Kenny Nelson and 6'-8" center Victor Collins, Bryant can concentrate on playing forward.

Nelson's strength under the goal gives the team the big-man presence it lacked.

"He plays like Rick Mahorn," said Terrell. "He makes you pay down low, on both ends of the floor. Nelson gives the team that bad boy' image, and yeah, we can use that. Opponents need to know we won't get banged up down low." Collins, who was a MarForPac

Regional Tournament All-

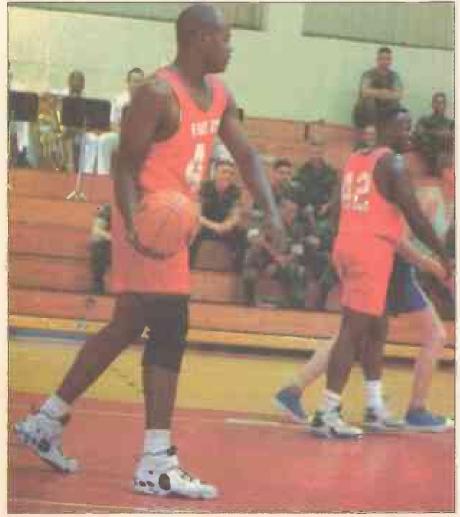

Tournament Team member and selected to attend the All-Marine camp last year, is currently deployed. That's why assistant coaches Robert Clarke and Robert Miller suggested to Terrell to keep 20 players on the active roster.

Good thing there are no salarycap restrictions in varsity ball. "You always have someone out in the field, on duty, in school or on temporary duty somewhere else," Clarke said. "This way, we'll always be sure to have at least 15 players and we won't have to teach a new player our system."

Last year's squad suffered from lack of fan support, and Terrell and his squad is seeking more unit support as well, especially for the MarForPac Regional Tournament, in Okinawa in February.

"We want to bring the gold back to Hawaii," said Terrell. "Hawaii had a string of championships in the early 90s. We can't get back to that level without support from everyone. With understanding regarding unit missions, I hope all the players can be released to spend the 15 days necessary to take the best team to Japan. If this happens, I think we'll see excellent results."

The varsity team's first challenge is a pre-season tournament at Pearl Harbor Sept. 27-29. The season begins in the middle of October.

SSgt. Stephen Gude

6'-6" forward-center Kevin Spivey (with ball) returns as one of the Hawaii Marine varsity basketball team's key starters.

Hot chow, no waiting

Marines at PTA eat hot breakfasts, dinners

Sgt. William Poff

OHAKULOA TRAINING AREA, Hawaii — Marines here will not have to endure a constant bombardment of the meals in the little brown packages known as Meals Ready to Eat, but will have their hunger sated with hot chow, regardless of the training location in the field.

The messing facilities here will support nearly 2,300 Marines daily throughout their deployment to the Big Island.

"This is the most extensive messing operation I've ever seen at PTA "said GySgt. John Negron, acting regimental mess chief. "We will be supporting 27 different ranges by vatting hot chow to the field and this is the first time a full-blown mess has been constructed. We'll be vatting hot chow to other field messes as "Every piece of mess gear in 3d Marine Regiment is here," Negron added. "We have over 220 containers for juices and hot food to be delivered to the various training sites.'

Once the vatting process begins a row of vat cans awaiting pickup can stretch more than 100 yards outside the messhall at PTA's base camp, said Negron.

"The units in the field get everything a Marine receives in the base camp messhall," he said. "Each meal will have the standard meats, vegetables, starches, fruits, juice and salad that we normally serve on our 10-day cycle."

Such an extensive operation takes immense preparation to adequately feed everyone, according to Negron.

"Our bakers who prepare the baked goods for the next day begin working in the kitchens at 1 a.m.," said Negron. "The cooks arrive at 3 a.m. to prepare breakfast and at 5:30 a.m. the first vat cans will be picked up for units in the field. Right after we secure from breakfast, preparation for evening chow is started. Since lunch is not served, everyone is required to eat an MRE for that meal."

A fully functional field mess was set up at "Pu'u O," and because of the prehistoric look of the area it was dubbed "Jurassic Park Dining Hall," said Negron.

"The biggest challenge of operating a mess site in the field is sanitation standards," said Negron. "Bad sanitation in a field mess is a quick way to bring a battalion to a screeching halt.

"To ensure cleanliness, a corpsman inspects all food preparation activities every day," Negron continued. "The corpsman also ensures the cooks and messmen bathe and use proper hygiene whenever they are handling food or fresh water in the messing and preparation area." Even with the lack of the modern convenience messmen have at facilities back at MCB Hawaii, their objective is quality service.

"It's easy to take for granted the convenience of the gear we have in the rear but here, we have to work with what we bring," said LCpl. Tony J. Dahl, cook, 3d Battalion, 3d Marines. "Even with the challenges of getting quality meals prepared here, I like the leadership and responsibility it takes to get the job done. I'm just doing my job, ensuring everyone gets fed the correct portions, and supervising the cooks and messmen from start to finish. ensuring each meal is prepared correctly." Knowing their next meal will be a hot and tasty

Marines deployed to Pohakuloa Training Area enjoy two hot meals a day, whether it's a sit-down meal in a messing facility or brought entree from the kitchens at Jurassic Park Dining Facility. Marines here don't have to look upon their morning and evening meals with the drudgery of tearing open the tough

Chaplain's Corner

grew up with a little song that said "This little light of mine, I'm gonna let it shine... hide it under a bushel, no! I'm gonna let it shine..." Whether you realize it or not, you have the ability to light your world. As I am writing this, the Olympics are in full swing, so if you'll pardon me, one more Olympic story.

One of the highlights for me was the opening ceremony and the lighting of the Olympic flame that has burned brightly throughout the Olympic games. What was fascinating is that the flame traveled around the world before it reached Atlanta and Mohammed Ali passed it on one final time. Many people carried the flame as a tremendous symbol of unity and combined effort. It just so happens that one of my very good friends was chosen to carry the flame in Waco, Tex. As he spoke of his experience, he said it was the thrill of a lifetime, something he will always remember. He said, however, that the carrying of the torch pales in comparison to the opportunity he has to enlighten the lives of people with a message of eternal hope. Throughout the Olympics, the flame has burned. When a terrorist bomb exploded in Centennial Park, the flame continued to burn. When injuries occured, the flame continued to burn.

We too have the ability and often the opportunities to light our world. There is a scripture verse that says "Let your light shine... Unfortunately there are a good number of people around whose lives are very dark, their pain very great and hopelessness abounds. We may be, and furthermore, must be agents of help and hope. Share a word of encouragement with them, let them know you care and take a moment to help. There may even be explosive tragedies all around and the good news is that in the darkness, the light shines the brightest. Let your light shine.

ingle Marine Program, what the heck is it and what can they do for me that I can't do on my own? Why do I need to go to the SMP Center when I have everything I need right here in my room? Single Marine Program, what do they do, find dates for us or something?

These are some of the questions I get asked a lot. The plain and simple fact is I can answer all three at once: the Single Marine Program is everything you want to make it. It's a place to be with others and meet new people. These people do not necessarily mean others in the military. We do a lot of things, including getting together with the community.

Valdov

You see, the SMP is a program the participants take ownership of. The focus and vision of the program overall depend on those who are active - and even the not-so-active - participants. I think the most important thing to remember is the SMP and staff work for the single Marines and Sailors aboard MCB Hawaii K-Bay and Camp Smith.

Is there a thought you've had on how a group could get together and have a fund-raiser, whether it's for a program or a worthy cause? Have you heard of a program in the community in need of volunteers? Do you want to do more with your time than merely exist? My friends, the SMP Center is where you need to go. I welcome all of your ideas and suggestions.

I want everyone to be sure to come out to the Camp Smith SMP/Rec Center Sept. 27 for a Country and Western barbecue and dance. The music and entertainment will be provided by a great friend of mine, Charlie "The Ghost Rider" Garrett. Keep your eyes and ears open for details.

Don't forget the SMP Center at K-Bay is open seven days a week. Movie nights are still Tuesday ad Friday at 7 p.m., so come on out and enjoy a great new video release and some freshly popped popcorn. For more information, call 254-759.

The Madman's Football Picks

SSgt. Michael Balmer defeated the eight-person pool, losing only two games. MarForPac MWR's Kathleen O'Connor picked Indy to whip Dallas, which tied her second place with Sgt. Nicholas Stitzer. Remember - the tie breaker is used only if someone is tied on Sunday. Whoever wins the most games on Sunday wins. Predict the number of points both teams will score in your tie-breaker game.

Arizona at New Orleans: Both teams are equally sorry. NEW ORLEANS

• Denver at Kansas City: I've got to go with KANSAS CITY • Green Bay at Minnesota: The Pack is awesome. GREEN BAY

Jacksonville at New England: NEW ENGLAND

N.Y. Giants at N.Y. Jets: This better not be on TV. N.Y. JETS

• San Francisco at Carolina: Is Carolina for real? Not. SAN FRANCISCO

 Seattle at Tampa Bay: Is this really a game? TAMPA BAY Washington at St. Louis: Two up-and-coming teams. ST. LOUIS

 Chicago at Detroit: No matter which way I go, I'll lose. DETROIT Dallas at Buffalo: Unfortunately, DALLAS

• San Diego at Oakland: This one's going to be a war. OAKLAND

• Philadelphia at Atlanta: Hello, Falcons? The season's started! It's not preseason anymore! Hello? Hello?? Despite my worries, I've got to go with my hometown squad in an upset. ATLANTA

• Tie Breaker: Miami at Indianapolis: Obviously, Dolphins players fear the wrath of Jimmy Johnson. MIAMI, 46 points
