MARINES, SAILORS BUILD BRIDGE IN NORWAY DURING EXERCISE TRIDENT JUNCTURE 18

Lance Cpl. Anthony Cardella prepares for a convoy during Trident Juncture 18, Oct. 29, 2018. Marines and equipment with the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit were rapidly projected ashore from USS Iwo Jima (LHD 7) during an amphibious landing. Trident Juncture exercises tactics and procedures in different environments which enables forces to increase readiness and improve interoperability with international partners and allies. Cardella is a machine gunner with 2nd Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment, 24th MEU.

Story by Lance Cpl. Margaret Gale
24th Marine Expeditionary Unit

ALVUND BEACH, Norway – U.S. Marines with 2nd Marine Logistics Group-Forward built a bridge Oct. 29, 2018, during the largest NATO exercise in more than 16 years. The Exercise Trident Juncture 18 provided a unique opportunity for Marines to train with other NATO and partner forces. With more than 50,000 troops from 31 nations participating in the exercise, Marines strengthened transatlantic bond in a dynamic and challenging environment.

A unique capability the 2nd MLG provided to the II Marine Expeditionary Force, who is deployed to Norway for the exercise, was a bridge company that’s under 8th Engineer Support Battalion. Their mission provided general engineering support to the force with employing standard bridging to enhance mobility. During the exercise, Marines and U.S. Navy Seabees, assigned to Naval Mobile Construction Battalion One, built a medium girder bridge to ensure maneuver of the Marine force. Almost 100 U.S. Marine Light Armored Vehicles and Norwegian Bandvagns, a Norwegian all-terrain tracked carrier vehicle, crossed the bridge immediately after its completion. “Gap crossing is a critical skill that engineers are tasked to accomplish,” says Capt. Jeffry Hart, the detachment officer in charge for 8th Engineer Support Battalion. “Being able to rapidly assess and breach a gap takes a lot of planning and coordination between all elements of the Marine Air-Ground Task Force and is always a challenge.” Some of the challenges the bridge company overcame during the exercise were due to the austere environment of Norway. According to Hart, the road leading up to the bridge is narrow with steep drop offs on each side, which complicated the transportation’s movement. The bridge also iced over during deconstruction, creating a safety hazard for those Marines and Sailors working around the bridge. “This created a logistical challenge for staging and employing our bridge,” said Hart. “The Marines quickly adapted to the situation and accomplished the mission. The bridge was kept in pristine condition and was ready to use for our operation.” Marines and Sailors swift actions helped this construction validate the most important aspect of the exercise for the U.S. Marine Corps, which is the relationship Marines built with NATO Allies and partners and Norwegians hosts, according to U.S. Marine Corps Lt. Gen. Robert G. Hedelund, the II MEF commanding general. “We have been reinvigorating our effort to know northern Europe better,” said Hedelund. “Should we have to come back here in extremis, the relationship with NATO is an extremely important part of that.” Building a bridge over a river, halfway around the world from the home station, was not the only challenge. It was also a battle of logistics, which is why the Marine Corps’ relationship with Norway is important. To assist in this battle and foster the close friendship, the Marine Corps turned to another capability that was available in this exercise. Since 1981, the Marine Corps has prepositioned equipment and supplies in Norway to enable a quicker response in times of crisis or contingency. The program, called Marine Corps Prepositioning Program – Norway, has been used to support logistics for combat operations like the war in Iraq. During Trident Juncture 18, the Marines utilized the concept by withdrawing equipment from caves to build the bridge. The prepositioning program in Norway enabled Marines access to prepositioned equipment and supplies to enable a quicker response in times of crisis or contingency. “I believe that logistics are the Achilles heel of any operations in the field,” said Navy Adm. James G. Foggo, the commander of Allied Joint Force Command Naples and the commander of Naval Forces Europe and Africa. “When we talk about the maritime domain, the land component, the air domain, cyber and space... we now have a sixth domain to talk about and that is logistics.” The overall exercise, to include the bridge building construction, helped II MEF test and validate their warfighting capabilities across the warfighting domains, better preparing them to help support NATO Allies and partners.

Lt. Col. Matthew Stover addresses students during the Earth Day poster award ceremony aboard Laurel Bay, April 24. Children from Charles F. Bolden Elementary School and Elliott Elementary School competed in the poster contest as a way to educate and involve children on environmental management. April 22 has been designated as Earth Day since 1970 and across the Marine Corps, installations participate in Earth Day activities to help remind all Marines, Sailors, civilians, and their families that their everyday actions help protect our resources and contribute to the long-term success of the Marine Corps. Stover is the executive officer of Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort.

recyclables out of landfills but it also gives MCAS Beaufort an extra source of income by generating thousands of dollars of revenue by recycling the appropriate materials.

“On top of reduction of waste we also deal with environmental concerns,” Wenrick said. “A great example of how we mitigate environmental concerns on the air station is properly disposing of batteries. Batteries are a universal waste which is considered hazardous unless recycled.”

In order to spread more awareness for environmental concerns NREAO also holds an Earth Day poster contest throughout the month of April, with an award ceremony held for the winners on Laurel Bay schools.

“The Earth Day poster contest competition is a fun way to educate and involve our children on environmental management,” Wenrick said. “We want to make sure they know how to be conscientious of the environment and how to implement good environment practices in their everyday lives.”

Ultimately the responsibility for recycling aboard the air station does not solely fall upon the recycling center but on each and every one of the Marines, Sailors and government employees aboard MCAS Beaufort.

“If the Leadership at each of the units were to take more charge of their programs it would help us out tremendously,” Wenrick said. “Overall, if the units are not properly disposing of their waste there is nothing we can do to help.”

For any more information regarding environmental or recycling concerns contact the MCAS Beaufort recycling center at 843-228-7694.

Cpl. Kaleb Remy, left, and Sgt. Michael Rocha inspect tires on an F-35B on the flight line aboard Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort, Nov. 6. Rocha says it's important that he and his Marines have camaraderie and trust. He sets up cookouts at his house and other events out in town so that he can get to know his Marines on a personal level, mentoring them and building trust. Developing them both professionally and personally is important to Rocha, as it leads to a stronger unit and mission accomplishment.

MENTOR life unless you take the time to get to know each Marine.”

For Rocha, when he teaches and trains his Marines, the most important thing for him is being involved. He doesn't simply hand them a text book or publication; he is out there on the flight line with them, ensuring they understand their jobs and how to properly conduct maintenance on their aircraft.

“For me it has always been about being a leader, not a boss,” Rocha said. “Get out there and actually do the work with them; teach them the rights and wrongs. I never just give them rules and expect them to live by it. I show them how to live it.”

This leadership style finds its roots in some of the Corps' earliest history, passed from one leader to the next. Rocha says he learned it from his corporal when he was a young lance corporal. For him, that corporal was more than an NCO; he also became a father figure.

“Of all the things I learned from that corporal one thing has stuck with me,” Rocha said. “Live a life that sets a high standard of leadership for your Marines to emulate when they become leaders.”

Mentorship is what drives the Marine Corps leadership program. Not only does it create unit cohesion and camaraderie, but also focuses on the whole Marine concept. Leaders have the unique and important responsibility of being trusted teachers and role models who will shape the future leaders of the Marine Corps.
