Change management

By Lt. Col. James D. Ulrich | 21ST MEDICAL SUPPORT SQUADRON

PETERSON AIR FORCE BASE, Colo. — As you follow the news coming out of Washington, D.C, you have likely observed that there are a great number of changes coming to the Air Force and the Department of Defense as a whole. While we are seeing significant shifts in policy directives and how we do business, this level of change seems to be more significant than in recent memory. Every day seems to bring about the possibility of a new way to do business or even the possibility of new missions. Closer to home, we see proposals that could shift the role of Air Force Space Command and how we execute our overall national defense strategy. The key theme across all of these elements is that change is inevitable and usually beyond our ability to control. What is within our control is how we respond to change and the efforts we can make to shape it appropriately. Change management is not a skillset that is commonly discussed, but it is a critical trait that leaders at all levels of the Air Force can develop. It requires thorough analysis to see how the change will impact your unit as well as how your unit fits into the overall mission. It demands a genuine connection with Airmen to understand how the change may impact them. Please note this is capital-A Airmen, as major events will affect all categories in different ways. Finally, strong change managers communicate well to remove as much uncertainty and confusion as possible. We often hear the phrase, “flexibility is the key to airpower,” tossed around casually, but there is a great deal of truth in it. Leaders who have the ability to adjust on the fly are the most effective when faced with challenging times. These leaders invest the time to learn as much as possible about the situation to make informed decisions. They analyze the possible courses of actions and potential results. Most importantly, they remain calm and flexible to ensure that whatever changes may come, they are prepared to guide the team to complete the mission. As we move into the early parts of 2019, we should anticipate that this year will drive significant changes in our mission and possibly some uncertainty in what is to come. It is natural for us to experience discomfort in the face of this uncertainty, yet this new year also presents a clean slate and untapped potential. We are serving our nation in an exciting time and the decisions we make now will influence how the Air Force evolves for generations to come. Instead of dreading possible changes, look to these times as an opportunity to shape the future and identify ways to do things better. Recognize that you are a key part of what the future can be. Stay positive, invest your time in learning, and don't be afraid to face the change!

“It demands a genuine connection with Airmen to understand how the change may impact them.

TRANSITIONING SERVICE MEMBERS

The U.S. Marine Corps Cybersecurity team has advised that a fake DoDTAP website, DoDTAP.com, has cropped up. This website attempts to download malicious programs to the user's device and redirects them to other malicious websites. The site is directed a personnel transitioning and likely could be collecting important information from those that mistakenly use it. Transitioning service members should ensure they use the correct DoDTAP.mil site. For more information, contact the Airman & Family Readiness Center.

TAX ASSISTANCE PROGRAM DISCONTINUED

The Peterson legal office will not be sponsoring a Tax Assistance Program this year. The primary reason for this decision is competing mission requirements (i.e. legal assistance, etc.) and the program's detracting from mission readiness. Second, the Secretary of the Air Force and Chief of Staff's August 18, 2016 "Reducing Additional Duties" memorandum limits the legal office's ability to obtain and train volunteers in each squadron. The minimal number of volunteers over recent years put a significant strain on the legal office. In consideration of the aforementioned factors, the decision was made to discontinue the tax Assistance Program at Peterson AFB.

Numerous tax preparation resources are available. Below are some convenient resources available to Airmen and their families:

- Free digital filing for retirees and active duty available through H&R Block. For more information please visit: <http://www.unitedway.org/myfreetaxes/resources/hr-block>
- Free IRS Volunteer Tax Assistance (VITA) program offers free help to those making $54,000 or less, persons with disabilities, and limited English speaking taxpayers who need assistance preparing their own tax returns. In addition to VITA, the Tax Counseling for the Elderly (TCE) program offers free tax help to those 60 years of age and older. Trained VITA volunteers are able to address military specific tax issues. To locate a VITA or TCE center near you, please visit: <https://www.irs.gov/individuals/free-tax-return-preparation-for-you-by-volunteers>

TAPS MOUNTAIN STATE REGIONAL GOOD GRIEF CAMP

Current and former service members are eligible to volunteer for this opportunity. After a group training session with TAPS Youth Programs staff, mentors are paired with their own mentee and work in small groups facilitated by an experienced leader. The one-on-one time with mentees gives them the companionship and support needed to feel comfortable connecting with peers and engaging in lessons. All activities will take place in Colorado Springs.

Land acquisition expands development opportunities on Peterson

By Erinn Callahan | 21ST SPACE WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

PETERSON AIR FORCE BASE, Colo. — Lt. Col. Landon Phillips, 21st Civil Engineer Squadron commander, believes an updated lease with the Colorado Springs Municipal Airport is the first step of many positive changes at Peterson Air Force Base.

The lease, completed in November 2018, frees up 278 acres for additional development on Peterson Air Force Base, Phillips said. “That’s an increase of nearly 20 percent of our installation’s footprint and fulfills the works of several wing leaders before me.”

“It’s taken a lot of effort, and the great leaders at the Colorado Springs Airport and the city of Colorado Springs have been just as involved as we have,” Phillips said. “We met with the mayor’s office over the past several years, and they’re just as pleased with this achievement as we are.”

Most of the land is concentrated east of the current command complex, near the north gate. The land is within the flight path of the airport’s runway and has above-grade construction restrictions, Phillips said. However there are elements we can construct and relocate from areas on Peterson AFB that meet this restrictive criteria – enabling Peterson AFB to construct facilities and processes on those relocated grounds.

“This is a huge deal for us because we were really restricted with the available land we had for development on base,” Phillips said. “We’ve always had a plan for new expansion and new facilities, but the additional land has taken that plan to the next level and really increased the potential of what we could do.”

With much of the base already programmed for new and existing development, innovative possibilities include moving existing command area parking lots, installation ball fields, 21st Force

Support Center RV and vehicle storage areas, and other appropriate developments onto the new land create new development possibilities within the interior of the base – that meet efficient development criteria, he said.

“It moves our current ball fields away from a major traffic area and closer to housing, which is fantastic for folks who live on base,” Phillips said. “By moving the parking over, it’ll free up 23 acres of existing parking to build three or four more headquarters facilities for new missions at the Department of Defense discretion, and deemed in the best interest of the military.”

Any new mission of a considerable size will require a lot of support, such as child care, dorms, dining, fitness, and support facilities, Phillips said.

“It’s not just a new mission – it’s all those other kinds of things we’ve got to do outside of military construction work to make sure our Total Force Airmen are taken care of,” he said. “As far as who is coming here in the future, those decisions are made by the DOD – but to do our job professionally, we’ve got to be able to maintain installation vitality and to be mission ready for any operation vital to our national defense.”

The Colorado Springs area is poised for exponential growth in the next few years regardless of specific mission growth, Philips said. The updated lease agreement will help ensure Peterson AFB keeps pace with that progress, he said.

“Should we be selected to bed down new missions here, it’ll be a great thing for Peterson for sure,” Phillips said. “But even without them, we’re still growing. There is a lot of interest in space missions right now, and Peterson is benefitting from that.”

Columbus AFB instructor pilots connect with Virginia Tech AFROTC cadets

By Airman Hannah Bean | 14TH FLYING TRAINING WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

COLUMBUS AIR FORCE BASE, Miss. (AFNS) — It’s not everyday cadets are given the opportunity to work closely with U.S. Air Force pilots; however, the Virginia Tech Air Force ROTC Detachment 875 was given the chance when instructor pilots from the 37th and 48th Flying Training Squadrons visited the university Feb. 8-11.

Nine instructor pilots, five T-6 Texan IIs, a T-1A Jayhawk, aircrew flight equipment personnel and the 14th Medical Group flight surgeon recently returned from a TDY to Roanoke Blacksburg Regional Woodrum Field, Virginia, where they connected with cadets from the Virginia Tech Air Force ROTC program.

The trip was an effort to boost rated career interest, but also added continuation training for Columbus AFB’s IPs. The pilots also helped meet Air Education and Training Command’s vision of “Recruit Next” by recruiting, training, and educating Air Force ROTC cadets on Air Force flying missions, primarily the Specialized Undergraduate Pilot Training mission.

“This is an opportunity for them to see what the rated career fields are all about,” said Capt. Andrew Barstow, 37th FTS assistant chief of training. “It’s a pretty cool opportunity, not just the nature of it, but the impact as well.”

Barstow also said the experience gives cadets a better realization of what they’re getting into, and will help them make more informed decisions about their future Air Force careers.

Before the pilots began flying, they hosted a social Feb. 8, in the dorms so cadets could get to know the IPs better by asking questions about their experiences and what it’s like to be a pilot.

“Having Columbus Air Force Base come in and having guys who are current instructor pilots now gives relevancy, excitement and motivation,” said Lt. Col. Barry Burton, Virginia Tech Air Force ROTC Det. 875 commander. “It’s a hands-on actual view of what it’s like from a pilot’s perspective on the lifestyle and experience.”

Burton said cadets get excited and motivated when they’re able to engage with pilots via video-conference, however, “having pilots on the ground takes it to a much higher level.”

To make the most out of their visit, the T-1A IPs were also able to meet with North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University Det. 605 cadets at Greensboro, North Carolina.

Throughout the weekend, the 28 cadets were briefed and experienced the capabilities of the T-1A and T-6 aircraft.

“My favorite part of this experience was getting the opportunity to not only fly in the T-6, but get to learn and ask questions from the pilots,” said Olivia Ellis, Virginia Tech Air Force ROTC Det. 875 cadet. “This opportunity made me feel grateful for the opportunities the Air Force offers cadets and I think opportunities like this should be available to more cadets.”

Capt. Max Adler, 41st FTS check pilot, Maj. Scott Meskimen, 14th Operations Group executive officer, and Barstow were part of the IP group and are Virginia Tech alumni. This visit provided an opportunity to return to their alma mater and show new cadets some aspects of a pilot’s life.

“It’s a very amazing experience,” Barstow said. “I’m shaking hands with cadets and I’m walking through the same hallways I did as an ROTC cadet. It’s kind of surreal when I think about it. We got so much support to help us make it happen, so I’m really appreciative and excited. I feel like I’m giving back to the guys that help me get to this position here.”

FARP: Land, refuel, leave

Staff Sgt. Matthew Lara, 355th Logistics Readiness Squadron forward area refueling point operator, prepares to refuel an A-10 Thunderbolt II at an undisclosed location, Jan. 30, 2019. Of the entire U.S. Air Force, there are a total of 63 qualified FARP team members.

By Airman 1st Class Kristine Legate | 355TH WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

DAVIS-MONTHAN AIR FORCE BASE, Ariz.(AFNS) — In the darkness of night, forward area refueling point team members wait for a HC-130J Combat King II to land — marking the start of training.

FARP, a specialty within the petroleum, oils and lubrication career field, trains Airmen to effectively refuel aircraft in remote locations when air-to-air refueling is not possible or when fueling stations are not accessible.

Davis-Monthan is one of seven bases which can provide FARP capabilities. Of the entire U.S. Air Force, there are a total of 63 qualified FARP team members — nine for each base.

“We come in with everything we need to deliver fuel from one aircraft to another,” said Staff Sgt. Drake Burch, 355th Logistics Readiness Squadron FARP operator. “So that others have enough fuel to complete their missions and make it back home safe.”

FARP plays a role in the U.S. military’s adaptive basing abilities to deliver airpower lethality more effectively and efficiently anywhere in the world by being able to provide a mobile refueling point anywhere an aircraft can land.

“With the ability to set up a refueling site with both minimal equipment and personnel, we are able to provide versatility while leaving a low footprint” Burch said.

To maintain readiness in adverse conditions, FARP training can take place anytime, day or night, and consists of members wearing roughly 60 pounds of gear, to include a rifle, vest, magazines, night-vision goggles, a helmet and survival gear, while performing refueling tasks to simulate encounters they may face downrange.

“We practice how we play,” said Staff Sgt. Matthew Lara, 355th LRS FARP operator. “It helps us prepare for real-world situations. Downrange we could have scenarios where we have to land, refuel and leave in under an hour.”

Training can be strenuous and demanding. To even qualify for FARP, Airmen must pass Survival, Evasion, Resistance, and Escape (SERE) school and go through an altitude chamber. In training situations, which can sometimes take place in pitch black darkness, FARP members must show they can refuel aircraft even in the most austere environments. Training in less-than-ideal conditions allow Airmen to hone their skills which will, in turn, allow them to support the mission in any situation.

“It’s demanding — both physically and mentally. On the job, exhaustion can easily creep up on you and thoughts of wanting to quit start to cross your mind, but you don’t quit,” Lara said. “In a real-world situation you can’t just stop, you have to keep going to complete the mission.”

Airmen discuss an upcoming training that includes a forward area refueling point team at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base, Arizona, Oct. 4, 2018. FARP training includes members wearing full body armor while performing refueling tasks to simulate encounters they may face downrange.
