NCO Academy launches virtual BLC in response to pandemic

Sgt. Zoe Garbarino
50th PAD

The Fort Stewart Noncommissioned Officer Academy recently transitioned the Basic Leader Course from a resident course to a virtual course due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Spc. Ariel Ide, human resources specialist, Signal Intelligence Sustainment Company, Headquarters and Headquarters Battalion, 3rd Infantry Division, said she would compare virtual BLC to an online college class, yet more intense because it is packed into 22 days online, covering a large variety of leadership skills and Army tasks and regulations.

BLC is an Army course aimed to teach corporal and specialist Soldiers leadership skills and prepare them to take on the role of a noncommissioned officer. Traditionally, the students come with all the necessary paperwork and are administered an Army Physical Fitness Test, followed by roughly 20 days of face-to-face instruction on various subjects to shape them into leaders. Instructors share experiences that open discussions amongst the class, and students answer each other's questions.

Staff Sgt. Heather Dawson, a small group leader at the NCOA, has been instructing BLC for a year and a half.

"The virtual BLC is the same but is being ran through Blackboard," said Dawson. "The only significant difference is that we do not get face-to-face time."

Ide said a significant skill the students are learning is adapting to change. As the first class to conduct BLC virtually, these future NCOs are in the frontlines leading by example, and their input about the course will be invaluable to future iterations.

"My favorite part of the course has been being able to do the work in my own space," Ide said. "Since I was teleworking before the course started, I already have everything I need right next to me at all times. If I can't sleep and have an essay due in two days, I can easily reach over at 2 [a.m.] and start working if I need to."

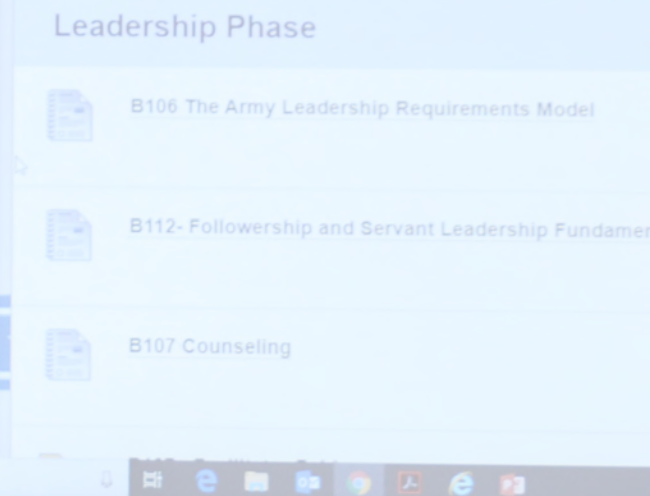

Dawson said her platoon begins each morning with an attendance discussion, which is followed by group activities through Google Docs and Google Slides. In this way, instructors can evaluate individual leadership skills and identify who may need a little bit more coaching and practice. The day concludes with a final discussion.

"You have to hold the Soldiers to higher standards in this situation," Dawson said. "They are all working from home, so it's all about seeing who is able to avoid distractions and willing to put in work from home."

Marne Soldier answers call to volunteer

Kevin Larson

Fort Stewart Public Affairs

Normally, Soldiers spend most of their time training or deployed, so interacting with Families as a volunteer is a new experience for Staff Sgt. Josua Garo, a Fort Stewart Soldier volunteer.

Garo decided to volunteer during the pandemic because the 3rd Infantry Division commanding general, Maj. Gen. Tony Aguto, called on Soldiers to help where possible and because of a sense of duty.

"It's really awesome," he said. "I'm glad I'm part of it. I feel like I'm giving life to the next generation, helping them grow and be healthy."

It's a few minutes before 11 a.m. on April 29, a Wednesday morning, and already two mothers with children in strollers and walking are headed up the bus ramp at Fort Stewart's Diamond Elementary School.

The food service staff and Soldier volunteers watch the Families approach, and being to call out to each other: "We need four lunches down here!"

White and red grocery bags go down the chain of staff and volunteers. Into the bags go fruits, cooked vegetables, waffles, milk, juice and other food items. A final staff member hands the bags to the Families.

The process repeats several more times as other Families walk and drive up to the school's bus ramp. In the middle of the chain is Garo, helping provide free lunches and breakfasts to on-post Families via the DoDEA Fort Stewart School Meal Program during the COVID-19 pandemic. All told, he helps hand out 250 meals daily.

"That's why we joined the military, to help out the community," Garo said. "A bunch of soldiers just said 'I got it.'"

Across Fort Stewart, 10 Soldiers are volunteering with the school lunch program, at Winn Army Community Hospital and other locations. Fort Stewart's Army Community Service is tracking the Soldier volunteers.

Volunteering is a new experience for Garo. He has only been volunteering three days and he plans to continue donating his time.

"As long as my unit allows me to do it, that's how long I'm going to," he said.

For more information about the school meals program, visit dodea.edu/DiamondES/meals.cfm.

Naomi Fayson, Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield ACS

She was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, April 17, 1971 and later moved to Sanford, Florida, where she graduated high school. She received her bachelor's degree in Criminal Justice and a master's degree in Business Management. She loved to sing and dance with her daughters, and taught them to dream big. There was so much more life in her to live, but she will rest well. "For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore; or die, we are the Lord's." Romans 14:8

Latest SFAB activates, prepares for Afghanistan mission

Sean Kimmons
Army News Service

FORT CARSON, Colo. — In a rare virtual ceremony, the Army's latest security force assistance brigade to stand up officially activated Tuesday as it prepares to deploy to Afghanistan this fall.

The 4th SFAB, based at Fort Carson, is the fifth of six similar units to stand up after the Army activated the first one in 2018, as part of a re-focused train, assist and advise strategy that envisioned the specialized units in hotspots around the world.

Security force assistance brigades

The SFABs serve as permanent organizations that provide a more concerted effort than previous ad hoc formations, such as military transition teams or security force assistance advisory teams.

To create the previous units, the Army pulled from conventional brigade combat teams that then reduced their effectiveness.

"And though necessary at the time, all of this had a long-term, negative impact on total force readiness," said Gen. Michael Garrett, commander of Army Forces Command. "Back then, we treated security force assistance as a peripheral task when, in fact, it is central to the National Defense Strategy and our Army's mission."

Since 2018, SFABs have deployed to assist foreign partners in Afghanistan, Iraq and Africa. Members of an SFAB train, deploy and redeploy together as part of an enduring group. After some time resetting back at home, the teams in that same brigade deploy again.

Security force assistance is far from a new concept, the general said, as today's heritage can be traced back to the Military Assistance Command-Vietnam created in the 1960s for the war.

The general said there is now an increasing need for combat advisors, which free up BCTs to better prepare for large-scale ground combat with near-peer adversaries.

"They are Soldiers who can build teams, solve complex problems and succeed in uncertain environments," he said.

The newest combat advisors have already learned specialized skills from the Military Advisor Training Academy, as well as advanced medical training; survival, evasion, resistance, and escape training; and foreign weapons training.

In June, the 4th SFAB is slated to conduct the next rotation at the Joint Readiness Training Center in Fort Polk, Louisiana.

It will be "the first one out of the shoot as we work to figure out how we maintain readiness as we adjust to the new normal," Garrett said.

Brig. Gen. Mark Landes, commander of the Security Force Assistance Command at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, dialed in via videoconference for the ceremony, which had Garrett and a few others spaced 6-feet apart with the unit's guidon inside a large conference room.

Landes called the ceremony "historic and atypical," but noted that while the ongoing threat from the virus has changed how the Army operates, it has not changed its essence.

"COVID-19 has allowed us another opportunity to showcase our character, our capability and our adaptability," he said.

The ceremony signified 4th SFAB's transformation into a trained and deployable formation, he said, adding he was impressed with how much it grew since January 2019.

"Every person in the unity and victory formation was selected and relocated to the unit," Landes said, referring to the unit's motto. "Every pencil and piece of paper had to be obtained using systems and processes that also had to be developed and incorporated."

The 5th SFAB, out of Joint Base Lewis-McChord, Washington, will be the last SFAB to stand up, slated for this summer. The 54th SFAB, a collection of National Guard Soldiers from several states, activated in March.

With about 800 Soldiers, the 4th SFAB is scheduled to replace the 3rd SFAB to continue the mission in Afghanistan.

"These SFABs are advising, assisting and developing professional organized militaries that can fight for themselves," Landes said.

The Army's latest security force assistance brigade to stand up officially activated in a unique virtual ceremony, April 28, as it prepares to deploy to Afghanistan this fall. The 4th SFAB, based at Fort Carson, Colo., is the fifth of six similar units to activate after the Army stood up the first one in early 2018, as part of a re-focused train, assist and advise strategy.

Its commander, Col. James Dooghan, said he was confident that each advisor is fully trained and equipped with the best tools to tackle the challenge.

"We selected the right people in the right positions to be ready and effective in assessing, advising, mentoring and assisting our international partners," he said. "We're proud to officially announce our activation and we look forward to this mission."

Matching Ad Grant Program

We are deeply committed to the community

The Frontline has established an advertising fund to help local business get back to full strength by subsidizing their marketing through matching grants. Area businesses can now apply for a grant to help them recover from the effects of the coronavirus crisis.

How Will It Work for My Business?

The fund is open to all locally owned and operated businesses impacted by the coronavirus, whether or not they are current advertisers. Grant money can be used for local print newspaper and special product advertising between April 15 and June 30, 2020. Grants are available for a minimum of $200 and a maximum of $5,000 of matching funds each month. Eg: spend $200 in advertising, we match with a grant of $200 additional advertising dollars to equal $400.

"We want to help our locally owned businesses, big and small, continue to move forward during these trying times. We feel by offering this grant fund we can help keep the wheels moving for our local economy. Contact me directly so we can form a partnership that will make our community stronger!" --- Dee McLelland, Publisher, The Frontline

How Do I Apply?

For a dollar for dollar matching advertising grant, send email to dmccland@coastalcourier.com to receive your application. The Frontline will respond within 48 hours. A community newspaper is only ever as strong as the community it serves. We know businesses and workers are hurting, we're hurting too. But if we can pull together as a community, we can weather this.

Soldiers reminded to exercise ethical responsibilities

Joseph Lacdan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Even in difficult times, the rules still apply.

As the coronavirus continues to spread nationwide and the economy feels its impact, the Army Office of the General Counsel warns Soldiers that potential problems could arise if they choose to start fundraising campaigns for themselves or other Soldiers.

Some Soldiers or federal employees may have spouses or Family members who have lost their jobs during the nationwide lockdown. Those shouldering additional financial burdens may want to turn to popular crowd-sourced fundraising websites such as GoFundMe or Kickstarter.

John Kent, associate deputy general counsel at the Army Office of General Counsel and expert in ethics, said Soldiers should familiarize themselves with which gifts are acceptable.

"A gift is OK in some instances and not OK in others," Kent said. "The overarching rule is it's not OK when the gift is either given because of the individual's status as a Soldier or an Army employee, or when it comes from a prohibited source. But there are exclusions and exceptions to this rule that may apply."

Soldiers and Department of Defense employees cannot use their status as a servicemember or government employee as a means for soliciting funds. Further, DOD regulations generally prohibit Soldiers from receiving funds from "prohibited sources" - such as companies or private organizations that do business with or have vested interests with the DOD. Soldiers and employees also cannot receive donations from federal personnel who earn a lower annual income.

Fundraising campaigns could be organized, but rigorous accountability of donors and records of sources must be kept.

"They are theoretically possible," Kent said. "But the pragmatic problems with conducting them within the rules that we have to follow make that extremely difficult."

Soldiers who choose to run such campaigns must be able to provide records, otherwise they may have to return the funds. Kent said the problem could be escalated further if patrons donate anonymously.

"Some platforms cannot or will not identify who the real donors are," he said. "And that poses a real problem."

As an alternative to fundraisers, Soldiers can also apply for the Army Emergency Relief program to receive funds in financial emergencies. The funds can be applied towards utilities, rent and other living expenses.

As Soldiers become more publically visible in the fight against the global pandemic, they should understand the rules on accepting gifts from the public. Members of the National Guard, for instance, have deployed to assist hospitals in various states throughout the country, prominently in New York City and the northeast.

Soldiers generally may not accept gifts exceeding $20 in value from a prohibited source or given to them because of their official positions as Soldiers, and such gifts must not total more than $50 annually from any single source. Those gifts could include donations of protective equipment like masks and gloves. Unless an exception to the rule applies, gifts of cash may never be accepted from a prohibited source or because of one's status as a Soldier.

Soldiers who have fallen ill with COVID-19 or another illness can receive certain gifts from their fellow Soldiers, to include food and other comfort items subject to certain limitations. Kent recommends seeking advice from an ethics counselor before accepting or giving such gifts.

There are some exclusions and exceptions to the base rule against accepting gifts from prohibited sources or based on their official status. For example, in addition to the $20 gift rule, Soldiers may accept gifts from prohibited sources if the gifts have been made available to everyone or all military members. For example, during Operation Desert Storm, Busch Gardens offered free admission to all military members and their Families. Certain social gatherings that meet specific exceptions may also be acceptable. Soldiers could potentially accept financial assistance from a crowd-sourced relief fund, provided that it does not discriminate based on position, rank or pay.

Soldiers should contact their ethics advisors if they are offered or have received excessive gifts from prohibited sources. Kent said such cases should be reported as early as possible.

Soldiers who have any questions regarding acceptable gifts can consult ethics counselors through their first sergeant or chain of command.

Questions on whether donations from prohibited donors or fellow Soldiers are acceptable should also be directed to counselors, he said.

"If there is a way for a Soldier to accept a gift within the applicable gift rules the ethics counselor will try to identify how that can happen," Kent said.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

Take steps toward better fitness

Lt. Col. John Hubbs
Plans and Operations Chaplain

Because we value everyone's right to his or her own religious beliefs, we might think it risky to even address the subject of spiritual health. I am willing to take that risk because I believe the condition of a person's spirit is ultimately much more important than the condition of his body.

A spiritually fit person is, first, someone who knows what he or she believes and why those beliefs are held. I am always interested in hearing people share their faith, even when their beliefs are radically different from my own. What frustrates me are the religiously indifferent. These are those who typically think, "Yeah, there probably is a God up there, but I'm just not a spiritual person." It is true that not everyone is a mystic or will have saint attached to his name by succeeding generations. But then, not everyone will win an Olympic decathlon either. However, just as the latter truth should not keep us from wanting to eat right and exercise, the former should not prevent us from taking seriously the questions of what we believe and finding ways to nourish ourselves and exercise spiritually.

Spiritual health also implies practicing what one professes. If America has a spiritual problem, it is not that too few of us believe in God; rather it is that too few of us who believe in God live as if God mattered. Most seem to treasure the idea that they will be with God after they die, but why? Why would anyone hope to spend eternity with someone he had no time for in the present? I have heard the old cliché about persons being "so heavenly minded that they were no earthly good," but the reality is spiritually healthy individuals positively impact the health of communities. Persons in touch with God have a sense of calling, and that calling invariably involves reaching out in charity to others. It is possible to live benevolently without a belief in God - I have met several agnostics who were genuinely kind people. It should not be possible, however, to believe in God who teaches us to "love your neighbor as yourself" and yet live selfishly. But this incongruity is all too common.

Finally, spiritual fitness means a certain preparedness to do battle. St. Paul recognized this when he wrote to Ephesus, "Our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but... against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly places." I frequently hear sports analysts talk of the importance of teams not "playing the other team's game." A defensive minded half-court basketball team, for example, would want to avoid a high-scoring, up-tempo game. Similarly, a spiritually healthy person recognizes influences in his or her life which can lure one into attitudes and behaviors which run counter to ones beliefs. By means of prayer, meditation, and time spent with others who are similarly committed, the spiritually fit person stubbornly takes a stand and says, "I refuse to play your game."

The writer to the Hebrews exhorted, "let us consider how to provoke one another to love and good deeds." I consider it part of my job as Chaplain to be the spiritual equivalent of the master fitness trainer. Fitness in any area requires a first step. Perhaps the current COVID-19 crisis is a good time to do just that. I heard that it takes 10,000 steps a day to lower your cholesterol; but it may only take one to raise your spirit!

904th CBN supports pandemic fight in New Orleans, Georgia

Ryan Mattox
MICC Public Affairs

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO-FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas – Personnel from the 904th Contracting Battalion at Fort Stewart supported units by providing both supplies and capabilities to state and local authorities to help combat COVID-19 in New Orleans and Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Lt. Col. Torrionne Reché, 904th CBN commander, and Maj. Jerry Andes, battalion operations officer, are providing business advice to Army, Air Force and Navy units operating New Orleans and Baton Rouge, and assisting in the procurement of COVID-19-related supplies and services as well as base life support contracts. Base life support services are being executed for those responding and mobilizing with the Army North Task Force-Center and 46 and Navy Expeditionary Medical Forces-Mike staged at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans and the Mid-City Baton Rouge General Medical Center in Baton Rouge.

Reché, Andes and the 904th CBN team at Fort Stewart are busy daily working COVID-19 requirements for lodging, transportation and basic life support services as well as performing contract administration on existing contracts.

“We are providing critical basic life support services and sharing our expertise in securing contracts for supplies and services with units that are strategically located in New Orleans and Baton Rouge,” the lead contract support officer, Andes, said.

Joshua Fejeran and Sgt. 1st Class Daryl Slate are the contracting officers for the Mission and Installation Contracting Command-Fort Stewart COVID-19 Response Contracting Cell, which also consists of the 611th Contracting Team and select members of the 601st CT. This cell works all assigned COVID-19 related contracting actions in support of Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield in Georgia as well as Baton Rouge and New Orleans. The 904th CBN also has two additional teams standing by to move forward if needed.

Headquartered at JBSA-Fort Sam Houston, Texas, the Mission and Installation Contracting Command consists of about 1,500 military and civilian members who are responsible for contracting goods and services in support of Soldiers as well as readying trained contracting units for the operating force and contingency environment when called upon. MICC contracts are vital in feeding more than 200,000 Soldiers every day, providing many daily base operations support services at installations, facilitate training in the preparation of more than 100,000 conventional force members annually, training more than 500,000 students each year, and maintaining more than 14.4 million acres of land and 170,000 structures.

Recently, the unit processed a request for 500 oxygen concentrators in support of Winn Hospital, 3rd Infantry Division and the Fort Stewart Garrison.

Due to the pandemic, there are many challenges with finding medical supplies and equipment.

“Every medical supplier in the nation is scrambling to source oxygen-related breathing devices, so finding vendors that can fill large orders is a challenge,” said Reché, who is supporting the 377th Theater Sustainment Command operational contract support integration cell with planning and coordination efforts. “Manufactures around the nation are churning out devices as fast as they can but it takes a while before the supply can meet the demand. Current knowledge of the market and constant communication with industry is vital to success of any acquisition.”

The fight against the virus is a team effort, and Reché and Andes depend on reach back support from their unit back at Fort Stewart.

“We have a resilient team of young, vigilant 51C – acquisition, logistics and technology military occupation specialty – NCOs and talented officers who, in tandem with the experienced purposeful acquisition professionals of MICC-Fort Stewart, are ready to support any COVID-19-related requirement in Georgia or Louisiana,” Reché said. “They understand the need for haste and use the FAR and its various supplements to implement solid and efficient business practices.”

While supporting their team members in Louisiana, the unit has continued to stay engaged with local mission partners, despite the challenges that COVID-19 has presented. The MICC-Fort Stewart contracting office has procured information technology equipment, which has enabled other organizations to meet its mission by teleworking. In addition, it has procured hand washing stations to protect the force and the Fort Stewart and Hunter Army Airfield communities.

“The entire MICC-Fort Stewart and 904th CBN team has done a remarkable job executing the mission via telework,” Reché said. “We have employed the available technology to effectively interact internally and engage external mission partners in a safe manner without missing a beat. The team is aware of the importance of everyone contributing despite the current challenge and understands that every ounce (of effort) counts.”
