The 87th Combat Sustainment Support Battalion, 3rd Infantry Division Sustainment Brigade, uncased the unit's colors in a ceremony Oct. 14 at Marne Garden on Fort Stewart.

"Ten months ago, this battalion cased its colors and deployed to Camp Buehring, Kuwait, in support of Operation Spartan Shield," said Lt. Col. David Alvarez, commander of the 87th CSSB. "While it was a very successful mission, it is definitely good to be back in Georgia, the home of the Dogface Soldier."

While deployed the 87th CSSB performed sustainment operations in support of forces across six countries providing logistics, services and maintenance.

"The battalion has a lot to be proud of," said Col. Steve Erickson, commander of the 3rd SB. "Every senior leader I spoke to said they did the heavy lifting."

The unit proved their readiness while facing unique challenges while deployed ranging from supporting the short-notice reception, staging, integration and onward movement of the 82nd Airborne as they deployed in response to Iranian aggression to conducting sustainment operations while mitigating COVID-19.

The 87th CSSB has deployed to provide sustainment support from World War 2 to the recent operations in Iraq, Kuwait and Afghanistan. With their return to Fort Stewart, the 87th will continue to provide the world class sustainment support they are known for.

"Now that we are back, our battalion is ready for the continued logistical support and readiness for the 3rd Infantry Division," said Alvarez.

Bradwell hosts military appreciation football game

Staff Sgt. Todd Pouliot
50th PAD

Richmond Hill High School defeated Bradwell Institute, 42-7, during a military appreciation game for Soldiers and Families Oct. 9 at Bradwell Institute's Olvey Field in Hinesville.

Kyle Adkins, second-year head football coach of the Bradwell Tigers, said the game was very special because of the proximity of the school to Fort Stewart, and the military connection that many of their students and staff have with service members.

"I cannot express the thanks that I have each day as I get to coach football knowing that there are others who sacrifice their lives so I have the opportunity to do what I do for a living," he said.

Before the game, military members and their Families in attendance were asked to stand and were recognized with applause.

Mascot Rocky the Bulldog represented 3rd Infantry Division and interacted with spectators throughout the game. The 3rd ID Band, under the direction of Chief Warrant Officer 3 Mike Krzmarzick, performed the national anthem before the game and put on a half-time show honoring each branch of the armed services by performing their respective song.

The Fort Stewart Garrison

Commander Col. Bryan Logan and Senior Enlisted Advisor Command Sgt. Maj. Rebecca Myers participated in the ceremonial coin toss in honor of local military members.

"We have a long standing relationship with our local communities, especially Hinesville and Richmond Hill," Logan said. "Hinesville is the most populated city in our nation for veterans or active-duty personnel, so it's a huge commitment from the local public, and we're just proud to be part of it."

Logan said he would be unable to remain impartial during the game because he has two sons on the Bradwell football team.

Connor Logan, a senior offensive tight end, said that growing up as a military child has helped him develop skills that have helped him adapt to change and make friends easily.

"I've met a lot of great people and have experiences I would not have had otherwise," he said. "Moving around a lot is challenging, but we have to ... keep moving forward."

Adkins said, like the military community which Bradwell Institute serves, he prides himself in hard work, dedication and loyalty. His coaching staff are driven to develop great football players who will eventually be great contributors to the community.

Stop move order hardship may qualify Soldiers for reimbursement

Randy Lopez
Housing Services Office

Service members affected by the Department of Defense stop move order may qualify for reimbursement under the recent amendment to the Service Members Civil Relief Act.

Those eligible include:

- service members who obtained a lease based on military orders for permanent change of station, but were affected by the stop movement order and have now found themselves with two lease agreements and a financial hardship

- service members that terminated their lease and lost the security deposit and initial rent

- service members that incurred a debt.

Additionally, the amended SCRA now allows service members to terminate their housing lease agreement without a 30-day notice. The termination date would be the day the service member mails out or hand delivers the termination letter along with the orders to their property manager.

For example, a service member who received an order on Feb. 20 to PCS from Fort Eustis, Virginia, to Fort Stewart, with a report date of March 20 would subsequently execute a premises lease to live in Fort Stewart Balfour Beatty housing on Feb. 25, with date of occupancy to begin on March 19.

On March 13, the service member would receive the Secretary of Defense's order to stop movement until May 11 and the service member would have been unable to PCS to Fort Stewart.

The service member would mail a written notice, and their orders, in an envelope with sufficient postage and return receipt requested, addressed appropriately to Balfour Beatty, and through the U.S. Post Office on March 15.

The service member would be permitted under the amended SCRA to terminate the premises lease and the termination of the lease would be effective on March 15.

For information on who qualifies, please contact the Fort Stewart Housing Services Office at 767-4278 or the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 767-3939.

AUSA events to focus on civilian workforce

Sean Kimmons
Army News Service

WASHINGTON— Civilian professional development forums were held this week to provide updates and vital information to the Army's civilian workforce during the Association of the U.S. Army Annual Meeting and Exposition.

The Army Civilian Forum began Wednesday and includes a panel of senior civilian leaders that will highlight talent management efforts.

The keynote speaker of the event was E. Casey Wardynski, assistant secretary of the Army for manpower and reserve affairs. Panelists include Todd Fore, deputy assistant secretary of the Army for civilian personnel; Anselm Beach, deputy assistant secretary of the Army for equity and inclusion; Michael Formica, deputy to the commanding general of U.S. Army Combined Arms Center; and Carol Burton, director of the Army Civilian Human Resources Agency.

The Army is the third-largest federal employer with close to 300,000 civilians operating throughout the entire force, according to the Army People Strategy's Civilian Implementation Plan, which was published in May.

One of the most recent efforts realized through the plan was the establishment of the new Army Civilian Career Management Activity within the CHRA. The new organization looks to provide centralized civilian career management across the Army enterprise. Under it, the Army's existing 32 career programs will reorganize into 11 career fields, enabling the Army to build multi-functional leaders capable of leading organizations and the enterprise.

"These are very exciting times for the Army civilian workforce, and ACCMA will play a significant role in enhancing the effectiveness of career programs by expanding talent management capabilities throughout the Army civilian workforce," Burton said Oct. 1 at the ACCMA ribbon cutting ceremony.

Burton added that ACCMA will serve as an integral component of the CIP, and will be instrumental in adjusting its organizational construct to improve integration, defining career fields more broadly, and improving efficiency through centralizations.

Virtual sessions or videos for at least 10 career programs were scheduled for Tuesday and Thursday during the annual meeting.

MARNE AIR SOLDIERS FOSTER INTEROPERABILITY

Sgt. Andrew McNeil
3CAB

Soldiers assigned to the 3rd Combat Aviation Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, held joint air load operations training with Airmen from the 621st Mobility Support Operations Squadron from Oct. 6-9 on Hunter Army Airfield.

The joint training started with Soldiers going through a pallet-building class. This classed allowed Soldiers to learn to build pallets and package gear for transport on the aircrafts.

The Soldiers spent the next three days learning how to weigh, load and strap down Army wheeled vehicles and rotary winged aircraft inside of a C-5M Super Galaxy aircraft and a C-17 Globemaster III aircraft.

"This training is vital to ensuring the joint forces are ready to safely and efficiently load equipment onto Air Mobility Command aircraft, ensuring rapid global mobility and combat power projection," said U.S. Air Force Capt. Brendan Djernes, an air mobility liaison officer attached to 3rd ID.

The training allowed for Soldiers and Airmen from all levels to work together. On the junior side, Airmen taught the Soldiers how to properly secure cargo inside of an aircraft.

"This training helps Soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers because of the amount of planning and all of the moving pieces," said Army 1st Lt. Ryan Newfrock, a Soldier assigned to 2nd General Support Aviation Battalion, 3CAB, 3rd ID.

Army officers and NCOs worked and coordinated alongside their Air Force counterparts in planning and strategizing all the moving pieces. Though the service members fight for the same team, the different branches use their own nomenclature, essentially their own language.

"The biggest challenge in the joint environment is ensuring that all participants are on the same page," said Air Force Maj Craig Carlson, chief air mobility liaison officer for 3rd ID. "Planning and communication leading up to execution are the keys to success. Actually preparing, folding and loading an aircraft provides unique challenges and perspectives that can easily be overlooked on a table-top exercise."

Training like this allows everyone involved to develop a deeper knowledge base of a mass logistical movement, which in turn, helps increase efficiency, Newfrock said.

The air load training allowed all of those involved to get their hands dirty. From the senior NCOs and officers coordinating movement and logistics, to junior personnel loading equipment, Newfrock said the training fostered interoperability among branches and increased readiness to go anywhere the nation requires.

Winn Soldiers support Army UAMTF mission, return home

Spc. Carlos Sanchez Morales delivers meals during his deployment with UAMTF-MEDCOM supporting FEMA in the Houston, Texas, area.

UAMTFs are one of the ways the Army is supporting the nation by providing military medical personnel to civilian hospitals overwhelmed with the coronavirus pandemic.

A Washington Headquarters Service, whs.mil, release dated April 5, said each UAMTF consisted of about 85 personnel. These subject-matter experts include clinical and administrative staff, operational medicine, infectious disease, preventive medicine, nursing, respiratory therapy, clinical psychology, occupational therapy, dietitians and pharmacy.

Each UAMTF was organized to help provide an expeditionary, deployable, and scalable medical staff to urban areas – and for the three Winn Soldiers, the mission was in Texas.

Col. John Balser, Winn Army Community Hospital's Deputy Commander for Medical Services, was part of UAMTF-16, assigned by Northern Command to support the 16th Hospital Center. UAMTF-16 provided ed medical support in Texas' Rio Grande Valley at McAllen Medical Center.

"We arrived to a health care system that was overwhelmed with COVID cases plus a staff that was exhausted," Balser said. "We went to work immediately, providing all sorts of services ranging from mental health, intensive care nursing, emergency response, chaplain support, respiratory, phlebotomy and ward staff. Initially, we were plugging holes; but did establish an entire ward to accept COVID patients. That eventually became our main focus."

"Over time, the hospital took on more and more of our tasks to the point that we were no longer needed, and they were back to being independent."

Capt. Daniel Karakas, a registered nurse with Winn ACH, a native of Boyertown, Pennsylvania, deployed in support UAMTF-MEDCOM with Spc. Carlos Sanchez Morales, a nutrition care specialist and a native of Jacksonville, Florida. They reported to Houston, Texas, at United Memorial Medical Center.

When they arrived, they found the hospital was hard-pressed for help.

"A lot of the doctors and nurses were working 90-plus days since it started in March, they were hit hard in Houston," Karakas said. "[This] is one of the reasons we were called to help."

When they arrived, Sanchez Morales said the nutritionist helped modify the menu to COVID patients, but realized their efforts would go beyond their specialties.

"They crossed trained me to help with patients – taking vitals, feeding patients," Sanchez-Morales said. "Sometimes, that required cleaning patients. It was a great experience because I was able to help others, and step outside my normal role – something bigger."

Karakas had similar feelings.

"I joined the Army to help out a great cause," Karakas said. "[I] became a nurse to help people in need."

Karakas said going on this mission was a great opportunity.

"Seeing the conditions and hearing their heartfelt message of thanks was moving," Karakas said. "It was a great experience. I was very grateful to help."

Physician's Assistants honored, carry on the professional legacy

Pat Young
Winn ACH Public Affairs

Physician Assistant Week is an opportunity to celebrate the accomplishments of Physician Assistants, Oct. 6-12.

According to the American Academy of Physician Assistants, the PA profession started in the mid-1960s when Duke University Medical Center's Eugene A. Stead Jr., MD initiated medical training based on fast-track training provided to doctors during World War II to four Navy Corpsmen. The AAPA said the concept was lauded and received federal backing in the mid-70s.

The military has a long tradition valuing the contribution of physician assistants. The Army began using PAs in 1971 to supplement the physicians and surgeons in the medical corps. As their numbers grew, PAs gradually replaced general medical officers assigned to battalions.

Today, the Interservice Physician Assistant Program offers between 150-200 Soldiers a year an opportunity to become Physician Assistants. Cadets that graduate from the program earn both a bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Nebraska Medical Center and receive a commission as a first lieutenant.

The students currently training at Winn Army Community Hospital include: Officer Candidate

Tyler Martin, Capt. Eric Dolan, OC Sgt. 1st Class Adam Church, Capt. Danielle Minichello, 1st Lt. Robin Carr, and 1st Lt. Joshua Formanek.

The IPAP mission statement is to provide the uniformed services with highly competent, compassionate physician assistants who model integrity, strive for leadership excellence, and are committed to lifelong learning.

"The education and training our student Soldiers receive is invaluable," said Maj. Dichiera, IPAP Phase II Clinical Coordinator. "Once they graduate, they will be charged with the health and wellbeing of our U.S. service members as primary care providers or 'doc' of a unit and battalion."

Winn Army Community Hospital's deputy commander for medical services, Col. John Balser, said, "... the students have a variety of backgrounds, and each provide a unique perspective once they get to their first assignment."

OC Sgt. Nicholas Mastromarino, IPAP Class 18-3, said his goal has always been to become a medical provider.

"IPAP allowed me to realize this dream while also furthering my military career and providing opportunities that would not be possible in any other program," Mastromarino said.

OC Sgt. Seth Ravid, class 18-2, said being an IPAP student can hard.

"When I look ahead to my future as an Army PA, it always feels worth it," Ravid said. "I find it very rewarding to educate fellow Soldiers about their health and empower them to become partners in their treatment plans."

The IPAP candidates are scheduled to graduate on Nov. 6.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

Practice healthy ways to relieve stress

Maj. William Oliver
Chaplain resources manager

I have had enough of the year 2020. This year has brought me the following: the COVID-19 pandemic, my daughter's Family living with me and my wife for five months -and my daughter and son-in-law have three kids and two of the three kids are toddlers - stitches in my hand, a complicated permanent change of duty station move, stitches in my face, my RV trailer getting wrecked, dealing with a difficult situation at work and witnessing a chaotic presidential campaign. Like a lot of people, I am so over 2020.

No matter how diverse the American population is, one thing that we all have in common is dealing with the year 2020. There are unhealthy ways to deal with 2020, and some of those ways are through alcohol, drugs, stress eating, etc. However, there are some healthy ways to deal with 2020, and I would like to recommend three of those healthy ways.

First, daily practice the spiritual discipline of reading your holy text of choice. I am a Christian and I receive encouragement by daily reading the Bible. Recently, I reread some of my favorite verses in the Bible, which is Romans chapter five, verses three through five. These verses say, "Not only that, but we rejoice in our sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance, and endurance produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not put us to shame, because God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit who has been given to us." Applying this text in Romans to 2020 makes me realize that my trials are actually changing me for the better, which gives me encouragement to press on.

Secondly, daily practice the spiritual discipline of prayer. Again, I am a Christian, and praying makes me focus on God, focus on His holiness, focus on His kingdom and focus on His people. Praying enables me to move from being self-centered to others-centered.

Third, weekly practice the spiritual discipline of corporate worship. Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, churches, synagogues, mosques and chapel services are facilitating corporate worship with the appropriate safety protocols in place. Again, I am a Christian and have been attending Fort Stewart's chapel service known as "Chapel Next." I receive encouragement worshipping with other like-minded people, and I have received encouragement in Chapel Next's sermon series on the life of Joseph. Joseph's life had some great high points, some horrific low points, and I have received encouragement studying the life of Joseph with others.

This year has not been a fun year for all of us, and I hope that the sequel, 2021, is much better. In the meantime, 2020 has revealed to us that there are unhealthy ways and healthy ways to deal with life's stresses. As a chaplain, I highly recommend three healthy ways to deal with life's stresses, and those healthy ways are daily holy text reading, daily prayer, and weekly corporate worship participation.
